Publishing your Scholarship

Dana Ospina

Digital Initiatives Librarian

What do we mean by publishing?

In addition to those formats we already mentioned…

- Social media posts (tweets, blogs, Instagram, Tik Tok, Yelp reviews)

- Poster presentations

- Non-academic publications such as essays, opinion pieces

- Non-traditional forms of digital scholarship

Additional Strategies

- Speak with your advisor and other faculty members with whom you work—let them know that you are interested in publishing

- Make use of the library and librarians!

- Consult the writing center

- Consider applying for research conferences like the CSUDH Annual Student Research Conference or NCUR (National Conference on Undergraduate Research)
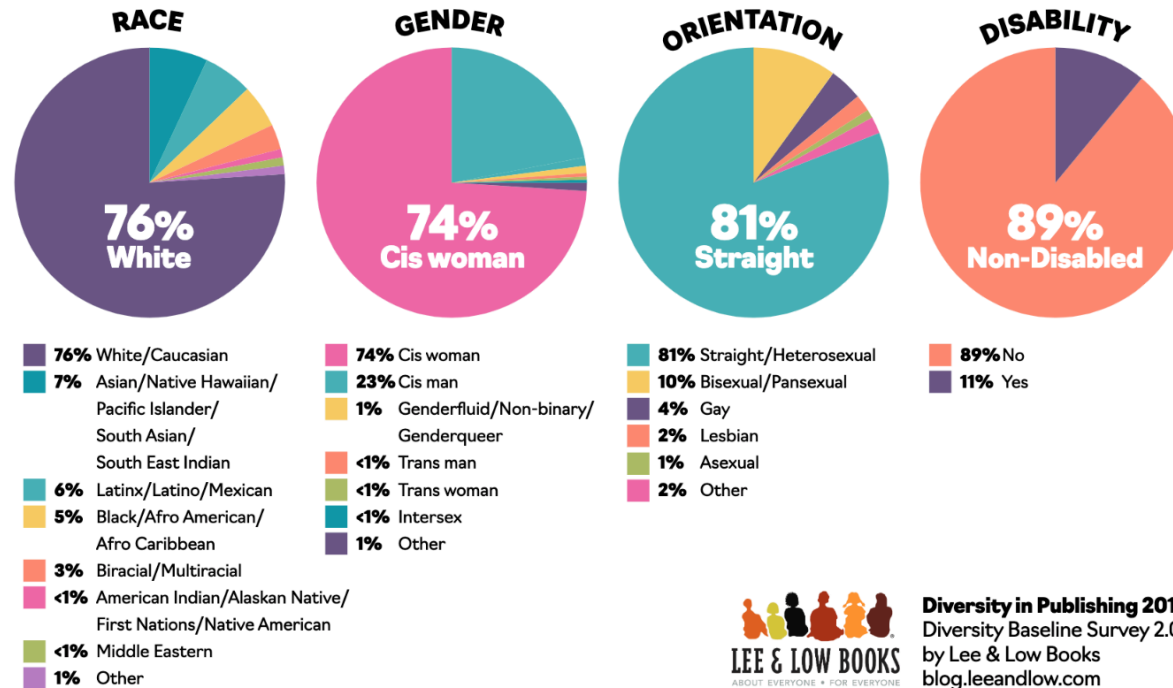

Traditional Academic Publishing Cycle

Author writes an article and submits it to an academic journal

Reviewers weigh in and determination to accept and publish, revise, or reject is made

Journal is made available to public either openly or by subscription/for a fee

Journal editor determines whether it is appropriate for the journal and if yes, sends out for peer review

If accepted, article, is published in journal
